Detailed Analysis

1. First impression

Eye Contact

- Your eye contact is steady, warm, and audience-focused.
- You maintain direct gaze during key message points, which increases trust and clarity.
- When you shift your gaze, it is done purposefully (e.g., thinking, emphasizing).
- There is no sign of avoidance — overall, the eye contact supports confidence and credibility.

Impact for clients:

Strong eye contact signals presence, sincerity, and leadership confidence, making your message feel more reliable.

Uprightness (Posture & Upper-Body Alignment)

- You maintain a naturally upright posture throughout the clip.

PEOPLE READER™

- The chest stays open, shoulders relaxed, and head aligned — signaling balance, readiness, and authority.
- Even when you gesture, your vertical alignment remains stable, showing good core control.
- There is no visible slouching or collapsing, which supports a professional appearance.

Impact for clients:

Uprightness communicates self-assurance, clarity of thought, and emotional stability all traits of high-trust communicators.

Stance (Lower-Body Stability & Grounding)

- Your stance is symmetrical and grounded, with feet placed about shoulder-width apart.
- Weight shifts are controlled and minimal, preventing distraction and showing confidence.
- You maintain good forward orientation toward the audience, reinforcing clarity and engagement.
- The stance conveys both stability and a welcoming presence, suitable for instructional or coaching communication.

Impact for clients:

A grounded stance enhances authority, control, and smooth message delivery, making the speaker appear more prepared and credible.

2. Engaging & Connecting:
